Lift Every Voice!

What I remember best about my internship year at Bread for the World is Friday morning worship.

Bread for the World was still a very young organization that year, housed in a barely converted warehouse at 32 Union Square East in Manhattan. Rev. Art Simon, pastor of Trinity Lutheran Church, had joined with other pastors in the neighborhood to find a way to prevent the hunger that brought so many people to their church doorsteps in the late 1970's. (Small world side note: Fr. Bill Byron SJ was on Bread for the World's first Board of Directors). By the time I showed up in 1981, Bread for the World had already had some remarkable successes, encouraging Christians to speak out to their elected representatives through Offerings of Letters.

But you can read all about that at their website, bread.org. Come back with me in memory to Friday mornings when I was one of a handful of Catholics in a room full of other Christians, in chairs along the perimeter of a conference room, perched on the sills of the high, old windows, or cross-legged on the floor if you were young or late. We read Scripture and shared reflections and offered prayer, but what I remember most of all is singing. Everyone else knew and sang all the verses of all the hymns. I loved how a room full of harmonies sounded the great Amen in many, but one voice.

Today, Bread for the World acknowledges that globally, hunger has been cut in half over the last 25 years. On the other hand, in 2016, the number of people worldwide who could not rely on adequate nutrition started to creep back up. Philadelphia's poverty rate is double that of the US as a whole: 25.7%; it is the poorest of the ten most populous cities in the US. Moreover, Philadelphia's food insecurity rate is 21%. Food insecurity is a term coined by the US Department of Agriculture to point toward a more persistent problem than simple craving or need. It means lacking consistent access to enough food for a healthy, active life.

Philadelphia's food insecurity doesn't just look like the guests at OSJ's Faith, Food and Friends. Many more of Philadelphia's hungry look like students who rely on free school lunches and afterschool programs with free snacks, or like someone wearing scrubs and the ID tag of a home health aide rushing from one bus to another on the way to a job that doesn't consistently provide 40 hours a week or an hourly wage that supports a household. Many of the people who are hungry in Philadelphia are working but barely able to feed and safely house their families, even with government assistance like the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) and earned income tax credits.

One of my intern jobs at Bread for the World was typing and proofreading the background papers intended to help members see the true face of hunger in the US. But the statistics and analysis that remain discouragingly familiar almost 40 years on fade alongside the Scriptures that we read together on Friday mornings: the instruction to leave a share unharvested for 'the poor and the sojourner' to glean in Leviticus 19:9-10; the multiplication of loaves in 2 Kings 4: 42-44 and all four Gospels; the parable of the rich man and Lazarus in Luke 16:19-31. Full disclosure: as an intern, I also typed and proofread the worship aids. But it was reading and praying those scriptures together on Friday mornings that led me to understand that to love God and seek justice meant raising my voice not only in song, but also on behalf of people whose voices are weak, drowned out or ignored.

And so I invite you to add your voice to mine, in Old St. Joseph's Offering of Letters next weekend. Write or email your representative in the US House and your Senators. Tell them that it is a disgrace that one in five of your fellow Philadelphians can't rely on adequate food. Tell them that your faith moves you to advocate on their behalf. Speak briefly about broad goals like making ending hunger a national priority, or about specific issues like protecting the integrity of SNAP. Bread for the World reports that a recent survey of congressional offices found that it takes only seven personal letters from constituents for them to start tracking an issue. Be one of those seven.

Here is what to do:

1. Go to bread.org. Click on the banner reading Protect SNAP in the Farm Bill/Act Now. Fill out the form to automatically send an email you can personalize to your member of Congress.
2. Or join us at coffee hour after the 9:30 and 11:30 AM Masses or the cookout after the 6:30 PM Mass next weekend to write your representative and senator a brief letter. Names, addresses, writing materials, and moral support will be provided.
3. Got a busy day next Sunday? Write a letter this week and bring it with you to drop it in the collection basket. For guidance, click on Activist Corner at bread.org.

I look forward to next Sunday, when I expect to be time warped into a place much like where I was on Friday mornings at Bread for the World in 1981. I look forward to worshipping with a community called to be a collective Christian voice urging our nation's decisionmakers to end hunger at home and abroad. See you next week!
