Catching Up to Easter

A long time ago I found myself in a Jesuit novitiate, the first period of training for a Jesuit. Nine months in, and I was about to turn 18 years old. It was Easter time. The Jesuits lavishly celebrated Easter! But secretly, I was wondering: Why is Easter such a big deal? Can't we just say Jesus died and went to heaven, after a brief sojourn to accommodate some farewell appearances? Maybe he was even the first to go all the way to heaven. Anyway, that's where he ended up—however he got there. Of course, he had a lot of influence on his followers during his life time—which seemed to me what really counted. If Jesus, in fact, "rose from the dead," what more does it mean than he just went to heaven? Anyway, what difference does it mean for me?

Well, I kept those thoughts to myself. I knew they were irreverent and very much against the flow, given the surroundings of a Jesuit novitiate. But something also told me I was woefully uninformed. An even better reason to keep reticent. But still I wondered about it.

About a decade later—as I made my way through the seemingly interminable Jesuit course of studies—I was finally sent to study theology. We were assigned to study one of the hardest books I ever had to read (except perhaps for some math books I never mastered). I struggled with the text. Finally, it dawned on me what the author, a German theologian, was trying to say through all the technical terminology: Everything depends on the resurrection. Even the events that the gospels recount taking place before Jesus' death and resurrection, have no meaning or significance apart from the subsequent event of the resurrection. The whole book was merely an explication of what St. Paul put so succinctly when he said "If Christ is not risen, vain is our faith." So that was my first hint at appreciating Easter. The resurrection validates everything we believe about Jesus and how Jesus connects us to God.

Step One—accomplished. If Jesus did not rise from the dead, then nothing Jesus did has any significance or meaning and Christian faith falls apart.

But why is that? I asked myself. Why did the resurrection give such all-embracing meaning to the life and death of Jesus of Nazareth? To answer that question, I reminded myself that Jesus never claimed to be a "one man show." He always pointed away from himself, to the God whom he called Father. Obviously, then, the meaning of Jesus' life and death critically depends on how his Father embraced Jesus.

When Jesus cried out from the cross, his cry—like every human cry—reverberated for a while, his originating from a hilltop overlooking Jerusalem and then dissipating in the distance. Did it collapse into silence like every anguished human cry must? Or did the Father hear the cry of Jesus and answer his dying Son? Could the Father allow his Son's last word in human history to be an anguished, desperate unanswered call? Was the promise Jesus made of ushering God's kingdom to be an ultimate falsehood? So the resurrection validates Jesus' words and actions precisely because it is the Father's response to the life and death of Jesus. I like this idea because it reveals how close Jesus is to his Father and how close God is to us when we join ourselves to Jesus.

So Step Two—accomplished. Raising Jesus from the dead is the Father's taking as his own everything that Jesus said and did as God's Son.

But, I asked myself, why did all of this have to revolve around death? Why couldn't the Father's voice from heaven at the Transfiguration have been the Father's definitive response to Jesus? Or why couldn't the Father simply have joined the celebration at the triumphant entry into Jerusalem? I guess what I was asking finally was the hardest question of all. Why the cross? I was on to something, linking the cross and the resurrection. Why did the crucifixion have to precede the resurrection?

Getting ordained a priest and serving in pastoral ministry helped me over the years to answer this question, though I certainly don't have this one totally answered. God's grace is still trying to get through the seemingly impenetrable wall that I, like all of us, construct against his grace. But let me report on a work in progress.

As you may know, for the three years before I came to Old St. Joe's, I served in a parish in Staten Island, NY. It was a big parish and we had about 225 funerals every year. Over the course of three years, in an average week I conducted a wake service, funeral mass and burial service at a cemetery. Death became a routine event in my world. At least once a week I stood before a grieving family. Sometimes the deceased was the matriarch of the family, the old Italian grandmother who had cooked the family pasta every Sunday for 75 years. Sometimes for a middle-aged person, it was a sudden, unexpected death. A few times, far too frequently, it was a young person in the bloom of youth who died of an overdose. I came to realize the obvious truth, that death is the definitive final force which will ultimately overwhelm each of us.

I was an observer of other people's grief. I regularly saw how death separates us from loved ones, frightens us in the face of the unknown, renders us helpless against forces over which we have no control, and so much more. What is the response of a loving God whose creatures—each of us—must endure what appears so senseless an end of life? But even more, for Jesus, his death was not simply another instance of the natural forces to which we all must succumb. Death for Jesus was the weapon used by his enemies to stamp out everything he lived and died for. So all the more it must be precisely the death of Jesus that summoned his Father's response. Since Jesus allied himself so closely to the Father's cause, didn't the Father have to validate that violence and even death itself could not triumph over his Son? The resurrection is the final triumph that only God's power could effect. Paul again got it right when he said that we die when we join ourselves to Christ, so that we can rise again with him to new life. Therefore, I'm no longer a bystander when Easter comes, contemplating what happened to Jesus alone. I, too, rise with Jesus from the moment of my baptism to the final culmination when he comes again.

Easter tells me what God, the Father of Jesus, is working to create in me. And somewhere in that mystery is the final answer to all my questions.

Happy Easter.

Catholic Charities Appeal at Work

Have you wondered how your gift to the Catholic Charities Appeal is used? This summer, the Catholic Charities Appeal will partner with the archdiocesan Nutritional Development Services (NDS) on an innovative fresh produce initiative. NDS will set up produce stands in underserved parts of Philadelphia to help families obtain the fresh fruits and vegetables they would otherwise not be able to access or afford. Only 25% of Philadelphia children eat at least one serving of fresh produce a day, and many children lose access to healthy breakfasts and lunches when school is out of session. Visit catholiccharitiesappeal.org for more information and to make your donation.
